The Price of a Good Decision

Noor is a Grade 11 student who hopes to study engineering at university. When she learns about tuition fees, she realizes that college can cost an arm and a leg. Her family has a limited income, so Noor wants to make a careful financial plan instead of borrowing too much money.

Noor makes a budget for transport, books, food, and university fees. She also works at a bookshop on weekends to earn wages and puts aside part of her pay. A school adviser encourages her to apply for a scholarship. Alternatively, she can consider a student loan, but she will need to repay it after her studies.

One weekend, Noor goes shopping for a laptop. Two computers look almost identical, but one costs much more because it is a famous brand. Noor remembers a lesson about consumerism and the human brain. Bright colours and exciting advertisements can attract attention and make consumers want products quickly. She decides to compare the features and prices before buying.

Noor chooses the less expensive laptop because it has everything she needs. She feels proud that she did not let marketing make the decision for her. She learns that a good budget, helpful advice, and thoughtful shopping can protect her future.
